Treasure the Tradition; Strive for Excellence (2013-14)

Dear Wah Yan gentlemen,

Welcome home! After a long summer holiday, it is heartwarming to see you come back to Wah Yan with smiling faces. Wish you an enjoyable and fruitful year!

Wah Yan is not just a school; we are a learning community, a family. Our tradition is to provide education of love so that each Wahyanite can learn to love and be loved; our education is to give a key for you to unlock your potential so that you can live out the spirit of “Men for and with Others”. You can reflect, take appropriate action and always pursue the best. We hope all of you have your own dreams, and you will do your best to make the dreams come true. You always do more, do better and make a better choice.

When you graduate, you are intellectually competent, you grow up to be gentlemen, and most importantly, you live out the spirit of “Men for and with Others”. To achieve this, we have two major concerns for this year: 1) To help you become effective and active learners; 2) To nurture a caring, learning community.

To help you become effective and active learners, we emphasize assessment for learning and you can acquire the knowledge and skills required to meet the assessment objectives. Teachers make better use of assessment data and give feedback to help you to reach a higher level. We will also mobilize resources to help you become more motivated in learning and achieve more.

I told some Wah Yan gentlemen, “You have been admitted to Wah Yan and this proves your ability is up to a high standard. All of you should have tickets for admission to university. Do you still have the ticket? Or, have you lost it? If so, look for the ticket now.”

Besides intellectual competence, our education of love emphasizes whole-person development. We hope you can grow up to be gentlemen who have clean speech, respectful behaviour, neat and tidy appearance. We promote Jesuit Value Education to help you build your character so that you can set sail on your journey of life with dignity, honour and confidence.
